King, Midas's fondest wish, to have everything he touches turn to gold, backfires.

This study sought to determine whether participation in a "Nook Book Club" literature discussion group over the course of a school year had a statistically significant impact on 8th graders' Florida Comprehensive Assessment Test (FCAT) 2.0 Reading scores and/or their self-reported ease, enjoyment, and recall of reading. The 8th graders randomly selected to be invited to join the Nook Book Club scored in the "3" (mid-range) category on the 2013 FCAT 2.0 Reading, a range selected so that students would have both foundational reading abilities and room to improve their performance. A small control group of 10 students in the "3" range was also randomly recruited. Reading comprehension strategies were practiced throughout the year at Nook Book Club, which met once per week from September 2013 to May 2014. Two to 4 weeks were spent discussing each book the club read. There was a statistically significant difference in both experimental and control students' FCAT 2.0 Reading scores from 2013 to 2014, but this significance is compromised by the study's small sample sizes. There was no statistically significant difference between experimental and control students' FCAT 2.0 Reading scores and the scores of their grade level peers, either before participation (April 2013) or after participation (April 2014) in the Nook Book Club. The few statistically significant differences in experimental and control students' self-reported ease, enjoyment, and recall of reading may also have been skewed by mental burnout at the end of the school year and compromised by the study's small sample sizes. Keywords: book clubs, literature discussion, reading comprehension.

The book explores the remedial pedagogy applied during intervention designed to improve the students ' metacognitive processes of learning new English-language knowledge. Today ' s globalization and technology on social behaviors demand that school-age students acquire reading skills by the use of audio-visual practices. The linguistic integrations during the intervention processes combined with direct instruction produced an individualized awareness of improvements in comprehension. Each student cognitively processed the audio input and visual text. My findings were related to the cultural practices of ESOL and ELL students to counteract the mismatch between home and school language frameworks. This type of technique encourages students to use the concepts of the English language related to what they hear, read, and speak within and outside of the school environment.

"Corporate reform" is not reform at all. Instead, it is the systematic destruction of the foundational American institution of public education. The primary motivation behind this destruction is greed. Public education in America is worth almost a trillion dollars a year. Whereas American public education is a democratic institution, its destruction is being choreographed by a few wealthy, well-positioned individuals and organizations. This book investigates and exposes the handful of people and institutions that are often working together to become the driving force behind destroying the community public school.
